

National Work Readiness Credential

What does it mean for job seekers?

Smart Center is now offering preparation and testing for the National Work Readiness Credential.

Job Seekers who complete this credential are required to pass four modules:

- Reading with understanding
- Using math to solve problems
- Situational judgment
- Active listening skills

Why was this credential developed?

This credential was developed through a five-year process, with input from a variety of businesses and organizations throughout the United States. These skills were determined to be the most important skills necessary for a person to be successful in the workplace in an entry-level position.

BOTTOM LINE:

Job Seekers who are qualified and better prepared to go to work!
